places large proportions. It has very extensive bottoms, covered with timber, vines, and thick undergrowth. When the waters are up they cover the bottoms, until the river in many places rolls its muddy waters along a breadth of a mile. The place where General Price has taken his stand is believed, from the nature of the country, to be well chosen; it is expected to present strong difficulties to the enemy, especially when the river is high or rather broad. It is believed to be Price's object to keep his boat bay at this spot, while the fortifications remaining at Jackson, also on the Central likely to be an entirely new invention, and many persons evidently believe that the Rodman 15-inch guns are the largest ever made. This is far from being true, however, and modern workmen have yet to attain the success of the ancients in large ordnance. The Sultan of Turkey has 22-inch and 28-inch guns mounted at Constantinople and the Dardanelles. But the great gun of all is at the Kremlin of the Moscow. This is 38 inches calibro, 18 feet long, and weighs 97,500 lbs.—almost a ton! It was used, so says its inscription, by Andrew Toffoi at Moscow, in the year 1382, two hundred and seventy-six
